"An excellent, fantastic and very accurate piece of work"
— Matthew Jukes, author of the UK's no 1 best-selling wine guide

Tyson Stelzer

If there was ever a year to buy wine in Australia, 2004 was that year. With the planting flurry of the late 1990s now coming into full-scale production, never before have we seen the volume of quality fruit that is available today.

Nor have we seen such variety. With more than 1800 producers to choose from and, literally, another one every second day, the number of wines on offer is like never before. Add to this an increasingly accessible range of international wines, bolstered by a strong exchange rate, and the options are mind-boggling.

Amid such competition, Australia has not seen a significant net increase in the shelf price of wine in close to a decade. The result of all this is that 2004 has seen serious varietal wines penetrating further down through the price brackets. The quality and variety of wines available to the consumer has never been higher.

The question of how much longer the industry can sustain this situation is a pertinent one, but this much is clear: If there was a winner in the wine industry in 2004, it was certainly the consumer.

WINE PRESS

My Top 500 Wines represent the pick of the wines that cross my tasting bench during each calendar year. The criterion for inclusion is a score of 88 or more out of 100.

The quality and volume of wines that I reviewed in 2004 has necessitated, for the first time, restriction of the listing to recent release wines. Even still, some 531 wines make the cut, representing about 44 percent of the wines reviewed during the year.

Inclusion of the drinking window for each wine is a new addition this year. This is intended only as a guide, and will clearly depend upon individual tastes. It is based upon ideal cellaring conditions. For simplicity, the drinking window for fortified wines not designed to improve in bottle is stated as "04," but in most cases these wines will live longer, albeit without improvement.

Noteworthy also is the identification of the closure for each wine. Ongoing trials continue to reinforce the notion that the closure affects the quality of the wine.

Hence, in some cases the same wine has been reviewed under different closures, usually receiving different scores. One-third of the wines in the Top 500 this year are screw-capped, reflecting the rapid uptake of this seal within the Australian and New Zealand markets.

Winery of the YearDalwhinnie

When it comes to extracting intensely fruited, tightly structured wines of exceptional length from his little amphitheatre of vines in the Pyrenees, David Jones doesn't miss a vintage. He describes this year's 2002 release as "the best wines we've ever put out" – and he may just be right. Nor does he miss a varietal. His Chardonnay, Pinot Noir, Cabernet and Shiraz are all stunning. The only way they could perhaps be any better would be through bottling under a more reliable closure.
